

The Little Star and the Lost Moon Once upon a time, in a faraway sky filled with twinkling stars, there lived a little star named Luma. Luma was the tiniest star in the whole galaxy, but she dreamed of shining as brightly as the others. Every night, she would stretch her light as far as she could, hoping someone down on Earth would notice her. One night, the moon did not rise. The sky turned dark and restless. The stars whispered, "Where is the moon?" but no one knew. Luma felt worried. She decided to search for the moon herself, even though she was small and scared. She floated through thick clouds, dodged comets, and asked the planets for help. Finally, she found the moon trapped behind a thick curtain of cosmic dust, unable to move. Luma gathered all her courage and glowed with all her might. Her tiny light cut through the dust like magic. The moon saw her and smiled. "Thank you, little star," said the moon. With a gentle push, Luma helped the moon return to the sky. When they rose together that night, the entire world gasped at how beautiful the moonlight looked beside a tiny glowing star. From then on, the moon always made sure Luma stood beside her every night. And Luma, the little star who once thought she was too small to matter, became the brightest symbol of courage in the sky. Moral: Even the smallest light can shine bright enough to guide the way when the world turns dark.
